Bundaberg grower first in the world to use new Nematicide

Dean Akers, Matt Kunde (Corteva)

Bundaberg sweet potato grower Dean Akers, is the first in the world to use the new Salibro® Reklamel active Nematicide under commercial conditions.

Mr Akers said, "As an industry we have been really looking forward to this. I was really keen to get a hold of Salibro® and as soon as it become available, I put an order in with Sunfam in Bundaberg. 200 litres is a good start."

"Salibro® has a new mode of action and is a new rotation choice that will help address any potential resistance issues if they occur."

Corteva Agriscience Central Queensland Territory Manager Matt Kunde, said there had been a lot of interest from growers with the launch of Salibro®.

"Salibro® also has an excellent fit in Integrated Pest Management (IPM) programs as it selectively targets root knot nematodes and has minimal impact on beneficial nematodes, bacteria or fungi. By leaving beneficial organisms in the soil Salibro® promotes more efficient nutrient cycles, better soil structure and allows natural pest and disease suppression to better manage secondary pests." Mr Kunde said while Australia was the first country in the world to register Salibro®, it had been a global effort to bring the nematicide to market. "As a result, Corteva has been able to register Salibro® across a wide range of crop types that include Cucurbits (field and protected cropping), Fruiting vegetables (field and protected cropping), Root and Tuber vegetables - including Sweet Potato".

Sunfam Sales Representative Stewart Greggor said Salibro® also offered a path away from some older chemistries used for nematode control which could be of concern from a health and safety perspective.
